WARREN SCHOOL

The Warren School, whose lower two floors have been transformed into a modern Senior Center, which opened June 23, 2002, began its career of nearly 85 years as a school building on Wednesday, November 11, 1896, and remained in service until several schools were closed in 1981 for financial reasons.

The year 1896 (the town's fiscal year and town financial report went to January 31, 1897) was a very important one as the town's third and fourth brick school buildings were erected.

In 1847 the town, then known as South Reading, had gone on a building spree with four two room schools (only the historic West Ward still is in existence). Two years earlier a high school was started which in 1871 got its own new building, the present Town Hall at Lafayette and Common Streets. Then with a burgeoning population to serve Wakefield turned to brick schools, beginning with the four room Hamilton School at Albion and Lake Streets in 1883, a lot eventually surrounded on the east and south by the Harvard Mills complex. Then came the Lincoln School in 1892 on what was once called Academy Hill. By 1896 both the Warren and Greenwood Schools were built. The Greenwood School replaced a six room school as the seventh and eighth graders were being sent uptown.

The Warren was double the size of the Hamilton and the Greenwood originally, although the Greenwood later was expanded in 1902 and again in 1924.

Both the original name and the original site of the Warren were changed. The School Committee originally voted to call the new eight-room school the Highland School, although its site was really just below the higher ground of Jordan Avenue and the Converse Street hill. But the Grand Army of the Republic still was a potent force and its H.M. Warren Post 12 sponsored Article 9 of the May 12, 1896 Town Meeting, which unanimously agreed to name the school the "H. M. Warren School." The original motion was for the "Horace M. Warren School" but apparently it was decided to have the shorter form to save money on the granite lettering over the three door front entrance (as a Senior Center the entrance is at the rear).

Major Horace M. Warren was Wakefield's most famous Civil War casualty. At a time when Northern soldiers enlisted for specific periods of time he enlisted four times, was wounded several times, and died August 27, 1864 at the age of 23 of wounds suffered at the battle of Reames Station eight days earlier.

The site originally purchased from the town's top real estate group was practically underneath Jordan Avenue, blocking out the sun from the lower floor, but there was much opposition to it (had the school been build where originally planned there would be no room today for a roadway at the west end of the building).

The most vocal opposition at Town Meetings seems to have come from Michael Holden of Bartley Street and Jacob Hartshorne who, with their allies, wanted the school to be built further east, apparently near Gould Street and what in the late 1930s would become the Moulton Playground. All the opposition succeeded in doing was to push the town into buying two lots rather than one, moving the school further away from Jordan Avenue and allowing more sun to shine on the classrooms at the west end of the building.

Apparently the town had good credit as the school opened November 11, but the Town Meeting did not vote a $1200 appropriation to furnish five rooms until Monday, November 30 (the actual expenditure was $1038.95 by January 31). Only five classrooms were used originally for grades 1-2, 3-4, 5-6, 7 and 8. The principal, who had already taught in the local. Public schools for about a quarter century, was Miss M. Annie Warren, sister of Horace M. Warren.

Out of the $36,000 authorized for the school, the records show $34,916.47 was spent.

In 1896 the Superintendent of Schools was Charles F. Hussey. The six member School Committee consisted of Melvin J. Hill, Ashton H. Thayer, William B. Daniel, Mrs. Ida F. Carlisle, Selim S. White and Miss Eliza M. Greenwood. School Committee and Overseers of the Poor were the only two boards women could run for before 1920.

The School Committee report in the 1896-7 Town Report stated "The years 1896-7 mark another point in the school history of this town. The erection of two brick school houses and the removal of the Advanced Grammar School from its old quarters in the High School building owing to the steadily increasing numbers in the High School, are matters of considerable importance." The reference to the Advanced Grammar School deals with its move on Monday, December 14, 1896, from the High School at Common and Lafayette Streets to the Lincoln School. The High School was growing in size and had graduated 20 in June, 1896.

For a period in the 1990s, the building came alive as it was used by local cable television, which now has a permanent place at WHS. Today the bottom two floors are a place where the town's 5000 senior citizens are welcome to pursue their interests.
